DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Jefferson Barracks, approximately ten miles south of the City of St. Louis, Missouri, is a former United States Army installation. The Jefferson Barracks Historic District is bounded on the north by the northern limit of Jefferson Barracks from the Missouri Pacific Railroad right-of-way west to the intersection of Grant Road (South Broadway). The east boundary is formed by the west line of the Railroad right-of-way from the north boundary of Jefferson Barracks to the north boundary of the National Cemetery. The southern limit of the Historic District is formed by the north boundary of the National Cemetery from the Railroad west to Cooke Street. The west boundary of the District proceeds along Cooke Street north to Kearney Street, thence west on Kearney Street to the west end of Buell Street, thence north and west on Sherman Road to Sheridan Road, thence north and east on Sheridan Road to Grant Road, and north on Grant Road to the northern limit of Jefferson Barracks.

There are two basic divisions within Jefferson Barracks: the quarters, in the vicinity of the quadrangle, and the ordinance depot at the north end of the Barracks. A stone marker on Grant Road designates the boundary between the two installations. A great many military buildings remain on both portions of Jefferson Barracks, including several red-brick structures on the parade field, especially barracks, a hospital and medical facilities, a post office, and various administrative buildings. Earlier buildings on the ordinance depot are maintained by the St. Louis County Department of Parks. Restorations by the County of St. Louis include a Laborers' House (1851) a stone stable (1851), and two early powder magazines (1851 and 1857). The latter building is used today to quarter the Jefferson Barracks Historical Museum, interpretive facility maintained by the Department of Parks, St. Louis County.

Since deactivation of Jefferson Barracks in 1946, much of the property has been subdivided among various government agencies and private owners. Numerous buildings near the parade field, quartering the Missouri National Guard, date from the 1890's. This quadrangle is located near the center of Jefferson Barracks, but is situated near the southern boundary of the proposed Historic District. Many quadrangle buildings are still in use by the military, but since deactivation, much of Jefferson Barracks has been maintained for recreational use by the County of St. Louis, and a portion of the parade grounds has been sold to developers. Housing tracts have proliferated near the Barracks' boundary, and some residential construction has intruded upon the grounds of the former military reservation.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Jefferson Barracks served the United States as the first permanent military installation west of the Mississippi. Through its 150 years, Jefferson Barracks has provided military security, economic development, and political stability for the state of Missouri and the Trans-Mississippi West. Because of its strategic location, Jefferson Barracks has played a role in almost every aspect of American History occurring west of the Mississippi River from 1826 to 1865.

When in March of 1804 Lt. Stephen Morrell crossed the Mississippi River to take control of the Louisiana Purchase, a new chapter opened in the history of the United States. In the years between 1804 and 1848, the United States expanded from the Mississippi River west to the Pacific and southwest to the Rio Grande. The United States first established a military base on the Missouri side in 1806. This was done in order to meet the needs of American business interests. These interests were the river and overland routes of the Upper Missouri fur trade, and later the Santa Fe trade. The Barracks further provided protection for missionaries, settlers, and travelers from hostile forces.

Fort Bellfontaine built ca. 1810 was to serve as the military support base for smaller forts further up the Missouri and Mississippi. (Henry Webb, The Story of Jefferson Barracks, Chap. 5.) Because of the unhealthy environment of the area, it was deemed necessary to find a new location. General Henry Atkinson was directed to select a new position. This position became Fort Miller and then, in 1826, Jefferson Barracks in honor of the late President Thomas Jefferson.

From 1826 through 1848, Jefferson Barracks was the most important military installation west of the Mississippi. During the 1840's it was the largest post in the nation. (Jefferson Barracks Through Five Wars," Missouri Historical Review, Vol. 36, No. 3, 1942.) It was during this period that Jefferson Barracks practically became synonymous with the westward expansion of the United States.

JEFFERSON BARRACKS HISTORIC DISTRICT

Included within the Jefferson Barracks Historic District are a variety of military buildings and related sites dating from the 1850's through the immediate post-World War II years. Troop quarters flank the south side of the parade field. These brick buildings, of late nineteenth-century origin include barracks buildings, a recreation hall, and a guard house. To the west of the quadrangle are a post exchange and the old hospital, used in more recent years as a club-house for the troops. On the north flank of the parade ground are a nurses' residence (1938) and two officers' duplexes (c. 1890). Other similar quarters east of the duplexes have been destroyed. West of the quadrangle, in the vicinity of Sherman Road and Buell Street, are the Fort Hospital (c. 1930), a medics' residence (c. 1935 - a WPA construction), a theater building (c. 1940), and a row of officer's residences (c. 1935). The Post Headquarters building (1910) and other housing facilities from the 1930's occur near the east edge of the parade field. A railroad station (1910) is situated at the foot of Smith Street.

In addition to the restored buildings in the ordinance depot, three brick powder magazines occur in sink holes on the southern portion of the grounds, between Grant Road and the railroad track. These enclosures are believed to date from the 1870's, and are being preserved by the St. Louis County Department of Parks. An iron gate, fashioned from the upright barrels of two large cannons, is located at the junction of Nebraska Street and Grant Road. This so-called "Cannon Gate", constructed in the 1880's, frames the entrance road to a small park commanding a view of the Mississippi River.

JEFFERSON BARRACKS HISTORIC DISTRICT

Centrally located, Jefferson Barracks became the out-fitting and training center for the military effort of the entire western half of the United States. Its vital role in the development of the west made it a significant factor in the economic, political, and diplomatic success of the government. Economically, the Barracks purchased goods throughout the Mississippi Valley. This gave farmers and St. Louis merchants a prime target for business contracts. Besides the purchase of the produce of the Mississippi Valley, the Jefferson Barracks tried to protect the business interests of the various fur companies and individual trappers in the Upper Mississippi and Missouri. One can read the works of H. M. Chittenden and Bernard DeVoto to recognize the military importance of Jefferson Barracks during the development of the fur frontier. Diplomatically, the struggle between the numerous American fur interest and the British Hudson Bay Company was a significant factor in the settlement of the Columbia River Basin. Jefferson Barracks provided the military assistance for these trappers thus allowing them and later settlers the opportunity to get safely through the Louisiana Territory. (A great deal of these sentiments are found in Bernard DeVoto's work Across the Wide Missouri.)

Ruth Layton in The Story of Jefferson Barracks states that the "history of Jefferson Barracks is the story of all the United States west of the Mississippi." (Ruth Layton, The Story of Jefferson Barracks. 1961. Chap. 1.) Her justification for this broad statement can be found in the ledger of names of men stationed at Jefferson Barracks. Only West Point produced a better copy of great American military men. Such names appear as: Davis, Grant, Lee, Johnston, Sherman, Freemont, Kearney, Longstreet, Sheridan, Leavenworth, Hallack, Taylor, Eisenhower, Pershing, Dodge, Short, and Lincoln. These are only half of the list of major American figures who were either stationed or trained at the Barracks. Some came for reserve training as in the case of Abraham Lincoln who trained at the Jefferson Barracks during the Black Hawk crisis. (Webb, Henry, The Story of Jefferson Barracks., 19__, p. 55.)

JEFFERSON BARRACKS HISTORIC DISTRICT

Jefferson Barrack's importance declined somewhat after the War of 1848. The frontier had become safer. There was no diplomatic threat from Britain, Spain, or Mexico. Yet, the Barracks would once again play an important role in keeping Missouri within the United States during the Civil War. By commanding the Barracks, the United States had strategic control of both sides of the Mississippi. From this point, Grant and Sherman would start their famous marches into the South. During the war, Jefferson Barracks served as the largest hospital unit in the western theatre of the war. (Layton, 1961, There were overall, 434 patients which were received at the base hospital.)

With the end of the Civil War, Jefferson Barracks continued to play an active role in the training and replacing of military units and soldiers throughout the last half of the nineteenth and first half of the twentieth centuries. Gradually, the activities and importance of Jefferson Barracks dwindled, and in 1946 the post was deactivated.
